Madeira High School Students Tap Into their Futures

Three Madeira High School (MHS) juniors were selected for The Health Collaborative's (THC) TAP Health Classes of 2021. THC's TAP MD program helps students explore futures in physician specialties, while its TAP HC program offers the opportunity to learn about a broad cross-section of healthcare careers.

Rosalyn Davis and Garrett Smith were two of 65 students selected for the organization's TAP MD program which helps high school students "tap into" a possible career as a physician. They will participate in virtual events and be able to ask questions in a live setting, view demonstrations, and attend a conference to explore multiple physician specialties. They will also have access to recordings of the live events.

Ainsley Westbrook was one of 35 students accepted for the Health Collaborative's TAP HC program. She will explore healthcare careers such as nursing, occupational therapy, pharmacy, public health, and healthcare administration. Ainsley will also participate in virtual events and be able to ask questions in a live setting, watch demonstrations, and explore multiple healthcare options through an online conference. Recordings of the live events will be provided, as well as monthly healthcare career and college prep readiness E-learning modules.

Of the students' selection into the programs, MHS Counselor Natalie Uihlein stated, "We are so proud of Rosie, Garrett, and Ainsley for their acceptance in this prestigious program and for representing Madeira High School. The TAP MD and TAP HC programs will allow for excellent exposure to their future career aspirations in the medical field. Congratulations to these three students on taking a big step towards college and career readiness."

Rosalyn, Garrett, and Ainsley were three of 116 students chosen from more than 30 regional high schools based on their applications and essays. "TAP Health" falls under the umbrella of The Health Collaborative's Healthcare Workforce Innovation Department.
